WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

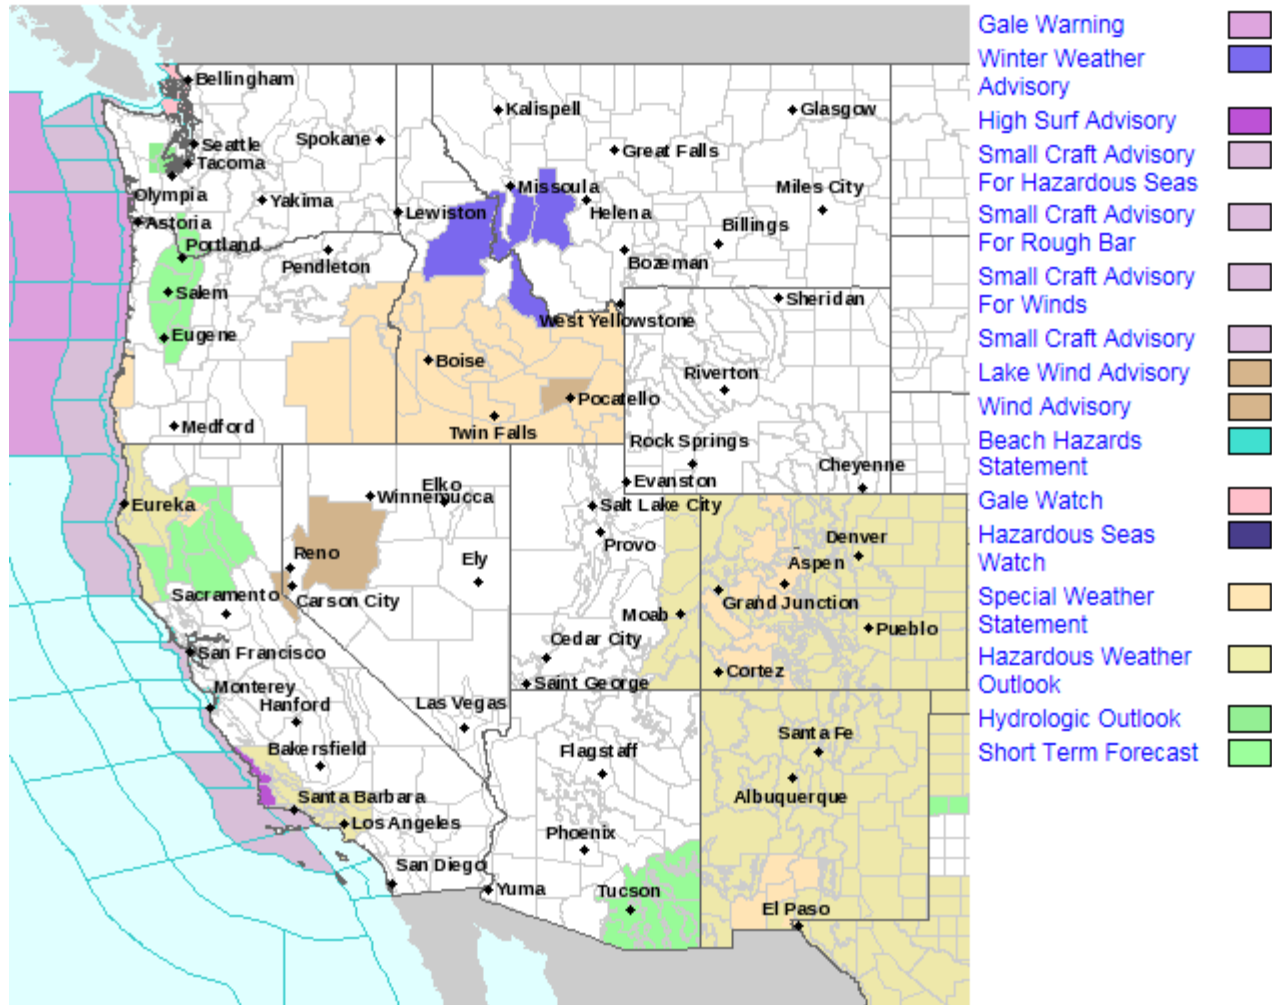

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

The offshore Pacific low pressure system has pushed the cold front and light to moderate rain onshore. South-Southwest winds ahead of the front are gusting in the 30-40 mph range in wind-prone areas from the Shasta Valley east, but humidity will remain high (40% or higher). The winds will die off as the front and rain arrives, in the west later this morning and in eastern areas this afternoon. The front and rain will reach the northern Sacramento Valley and north Bay Area by midday today, the west slopes of the Sierra by sunset, and the far eastern side of the North Operations region by midnight. The system will exit the region by early Tuesday. Rainfall totals will be near 2 inches in far northwest California, 0.25-0.75 inches elsewhere over the higher terrain to the west of the Cascade-Sierra Crest, and a trace to 0.25 inches at lower elevations and east of the crest. Snow levels will be 5500-6000 feet. After a brief period of warmer and drier weather late Tuesday and early Wednesday the next Pacific system will push a cold front with moderate rain onshore late on Wednesday. This front and initial band of rain will spread eastward and southward very slowly, reaching all areas to the north of I-80 by late Thursday and areas to the south of I-80 by late Friday. This system will continue through Saturday, and snow levels will drop to 5000-6000 feet. Drier and warmer weather are expected Sunday into early next week, but computer models show another low pressure system moving through midweek.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

A weak trough moving inland over the West Coast will bring near normal temperatures to the region through Tuesday, with upper 50s and 60s in the mountains and 70s to low 80s in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly between 20% to 40% today and then drop to 15% to 30% Tuesday. South to west winds of 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 35 mph will surface across the desert passes this afternoon through tonight. The back side of the trough will bring northerly winds of 10 to 20 mph with gusts to 35 mph to the south coast of Santa Barbara and the Grapevine Tuesday night. A brief ridge of high pressure pushing in from the south will cause temperatures to warm to 5 to 10 degrees above normal and humidity to drop to 12% to 25% Wednesday and Thursday. Winds will be light Wednesday and Thursday. Another Pacific trough will move into the West Coast bringing a cooling trend and an increase in humidity to the region Friday through this weekend. This trough may be strong enough to bring scattered showers with light rainfall totals from a Monterey and Fresno County line northward Saturday morning. There will be gusty south to west winds across the mountain ridges and desert passes Friday afternoon through Saturday evening.
